

SuicideGirls.com Columnist
Miss Truth Hurts Sex & Relationship Advice Column
January 2009

[There are no digital versions of this anymore or pretty print-outs]

Your book, "Cherry Bomb," is the reason that I recently got backstage and on the tour bus of one my favorite bands after a concert. This resulted in me hooking up and exchanging numbers with the frontman. He said he would call me the next time he was in town, which would be in about a month. Regardless, he told me that he wanted me to call him sometime and gave me a heart shaped locket before we parted. Should I call him or wait and see if he ever calls me or realize that this was a one-time opportunity and enjoy it for what it was?

-Not Sure in New England

As my book suggests: Be bold and go for it! He gave you his number so use it. And, he gave you a locket?!? Wow. Sweet. That's doesn't say "one time opportunity" to me. Call him and try your best to be cool, casual, and confident. But, keep your expectations low. The number could be fake one or he might not even remember you. Maybe he gives lockets away to pretty girls like one gives quarters away to bums. You won't know until you call him. Good luck!

I'm 19-years-old and have been with my boyfriend for over a year and half. We plan on getting married someday in the future, but we're not rushing anything because I'm young. The problem I have is with our sex life. I've never had an orgasm and he doesn't seem concerned with giving me one. He refuses to go down on me, he complains of "the flood," and doesn't really bother doing anything else. I enjoy sex, but I'm just never fulfilled. What should we do differently?

-Unsatisfied in Florida

There are so many things wrong with this relationship I don't know where to start! First, 17 or 18 is too young to have met the man you're going to marry. Just trust me on that. Second, he won't go down on you? Fuck that shit. That point is dump-worthy alone. Third, and most important, if your boyfriend is not concerned with your needs then he is not a good boyfriend and won't be a good husband. That said I didn't have my first orgasm until my twenties (sorry to all the boyfriends I faked it with!), so 19 isn't too weird to be in this situation. You need to learn to make yourself come first before anyone else can do it. Teach him what gets you off and if he can't rise to the occasion, there are tons of other men out there that I'm sure would love to fuck, lick, and suck the hell out of you.

My boyfriend of three years doesn't want to have sex nearly as much as I do. I am 20-years-old and I think sex should be at least every other day. We used to have sex once or twice a day. I know most people would be happy with just that am I'm simply not. My boyfriend is only 23, he should be all about sex right now and I know as he gets older its only going to happen less and less. I would resort to masturbation but it just never seems to be enough unless I have sex. I have mentioned maybe me getting a girlfriend (I'd fly both ways), but that was a basic, "Hell no." What should I do??

-Sex Deprived in Sarasota

If you want to fly both ways, you need a man who is cool with that. He isn't cool with that and he's denying you of who you are and what you need sexually. And, what guy wouldn't want two girls?! A gay guy, for one. A dud in bed, for another. Or, maybe your boyfriend just needs more encouragement. Tell him how hot he makes you. Tell him how great he is in bed, even if he isn't. Send sexy texts. I wouldn't break up with a guy over only have sex twice a week. Twice a week is pretty damn good, girl. But, if he can't up with a sex vixen like you, it might be time to find a stud who can.

I recently met two girls who play in a band together. I saw them perform and had great conversations with both of them. They are smart, sexy, and extremely talented. As of now I like them both. I would date/hook-up with either of them. I just would love to know how to express that I want to get to know both of them better (so I can decide which one to pursue) without putting out that "just friends" vibe or an obvious "I want you" vibe. How should I proceed?

-Confused in Connecticut

Whatever you do, don't flirt with or hit on both girls. You'll look like a male groupie and you'll end up with neither girl. Go to another show, have another conversation with each of the girls, and quickly decide which one you have more chemistry with and more in common with. Once you've zeroed in on the rock chick you're vibing with the most, ask her out. It's that simple.

My boyfriend cheated on me three times, but I love him and he's a better boyfriend after each time he cheats. His apologies always get me, but then he does it again. We live together and he seems to really need and love me. But, how do I get him not to cheat?

-Cheated on in California

Are you serious? Three times? Dump the dude! And get some therapy. Code word: Co-Dependency!

Aside from ad spaces on blogs and using my non-existent contacts in the literary industry, how can I get a gig doing freelance non-fiction essays for publications like The New Yorker or even a column like you?

-Troubled in Tampa.

I'm going to tell you both the same thing: Buy the book, 2009 Writer's Market. This resource book was my Bible when I started out. It lists every publication and gives explicit instructions on how to query them for work. Follow what they say to the T. The book also has examples of query letters and other useful information on breaking into magazines, newspapers, and books. It's mostly for writers, but photographers can use it for the contact info as well. Other than that, I say, write every day like Hunter S. Thompson did. You need to hone your craft and get published a LOT before you will ever be considered for a column. You should offer up your stuff for free at the beginning just to get a collection of clips for your portfolio. Once you get good clips, then start to sell your work. It's exactly what I did.

I'm interested in being a freelance photo journalist so any advice or help you can offer would be greatly appreciated!

-Occupationally Challenged in the O.C.

The answer for Troubled in Tampa works for you too. But you should also shoot as much as you can and submit your stuff per the Writer's Market guidelines. If it's bands you want to shoot, you can start with small, local bands that will let you shoot and possibly even want to use your tickets for their websites or press kits.

Is it true that you can have an orgasm without even touching? If so, how do it you do it?

-Curious in Colorado

I'm going to let one of my favorite sexperts answer this one for you. It's an excerpt from Dr. Ava Cadell's contribution to my book Cherry Bomb: The Ultimate Guide to Becoming a Better Flirt, a Tougher Chick, and a Hotter Girlfriend, and to Living Life Like a Rock Star. Dr. Ava calls it the Mind Over Body Orgasm and apparently it works for some women. She writes: "Since the brain is the most erotic organ in the body, it should be no surprise that you can think your way to orgasm. Sexual thoughts can activate the brain just like sexual touching does. If you've ever enjoyed looking at porn, you'll know what I'm talking about. Visuals of people having sex can automatically trigger your body into a state of arousal, making women wet and giving men erections. If you continued to watch erotica without touching yourself, you could still experience a full-blown orgasm. Even if you're not into porn, you can achieve a mind over body orgasm by tapping into all of your five senses. To begin, wet your genitals with your own saliva or some lubricant, and then using only your imagination; think about what your lover's tongue would feel like between your legs. What he or she smells like when fully aroused, visualize what they look like naked, imagine touching, kissing, licking and tasting his or her body. Hear them moaning with pleasure. Become aware of your own feelings as you let your excitement build. The trick here is not to touch yourself, but to let the ebb and flow of your orgasm take you on a mental journey to sexual ecstasy. This can also be fun to do with a partner as a safe sex activity."

END